

Chi Formula®

The key ingredient of Chi Formula is Siberian Ginseng. Siberian Ginseng is principally found growing along the banks of the Heilongjiang River, which runs along the Sino-Russian border, and also grows in Siberia and in Hokkaido, Japan.

The earliest recorded account of Siberian Ginseng (botanical name: Slender Acanthopanax) finds it classified as a first-rank medicinal herb in Shen Nong's Chinese Herbal Classic where it is cited as a fabulous tonic very popular among the common folk even in those ancient times. Cortex Acanthopanax, also very popular in Traditional Chinese Medicine (TCM), is made from the dried root, stem and skin of plants from the Acanthopanax family. Experimentation and research commenced in 1960 when Russian and Mainland Chinese chemists and other scientists began to work on the cultivation, domestication, exploration, testing and evaluation of the constituent chemicals, pharmacological functions, preparation and its clinical applications - multifaceted scientific research to prove that this medicinal herb has medical characteristics similar to Ginseng. Because of its health-promoting properties, they found it to be even better than Ginseng.

The medical efficacy of Siberian Ginseng has been well known to the Chinese since ancient times. It was widely used as a kind of "folk panacea" among Chinese national minorities. According to ancient Chinese medical records, the herbal medicine, Cortex Acanthopanax, has qualities just like that of Ginseng. "A small handful of Siberian Ginseng" states the famous TCM Compendium of Materia Medica, "is better than a cart-load of gold or jade". Certainly high praise for Siberian Ginseng, don't you think?

These medicinal herbs can be used as a dietary supplement because it assists in the maintenance or improvement of general well-being. An article in Volume 21, 1980 of the U.S. medical magazine Planta Medica cites that long-term use of Siberian Ginseng can increase oxygen absorption 11.9%, increase physical strength a significant 23.3%, improve oxygen and blood circulation 7.6%, and increase stamina - the body's staying power - 16.3%.

IMPORTANT Facts to Remember.

- Prior to man first landing on the moon, the American National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) in 1967 indicated that the active ingredient of Siberian Ginseng be added to the diet of astronauts.
- Former Soviet Union researchers serendipitously discovered that reindeer in Siberia safely survive winters by chewing the underground roots of Siberian Ginseng.

- Former Soviet Union athletes took Siberian Ginseng liquid concentrate as a routine energy tonic supplement. Athletes' records were greatly raised. This was one of the secret weapons all of their champions used.
- In 1986, astronauts of the former Soviet Union on space platform "Peace" took Siberian Ginseng as an energy supplement.
- For two consecutive years some 1200 drivers at the Wuo Wa River Auto Factory in the Former Soviet Union took Siberian Ginseng. Lab tests showed a 20%-30% reduction in disease.

Scientists have recently observed animal trials, astronauts, athletes and professionals under specific working conditions, and concluded that Siberian Ginseng plays a role in enabling those who are in adverse weather to better adapt to such circumstances.
